Redworth Hall was built as a family home in 1693 for George and Eleanor Crosier and their five daughters, and was then known simply as Redworth House, though still a fine 18 room building in its own grounds.

In the same year their youngest daughter Jane, married Edward Surtees of Mainsforth, a Northumberland family who owned land & estates across Durham & Northumberland, including Redworth village, and whose ancestry can be dated back to 950AD : in fact, at the Battle of Crecy in 1346, an ancestor of Edward Surtees named Sir Thomas Surteys, saved the life of the then Prince of Wales & was awarded the honour of the Feathers, which is why you can see the Prince of Wales feathers depicted in stonework and Stained glass around the house today. Also depicted in the stained glass of Redworth Hall are the coat of arms commissioned to celebrate the nuptials of Jane & Edward, that of Surtees impaling Crosier. The couple made their home in Northumberland.
